The Constitution.

In the debate in Congress on the Centennial appropriation bill, the Constitution of the United States received a general overhauling. The original and main object of that old document was to protect the rights of the minority against the aggressions of the majority. Our Fathers labored long and hard to produce it, and it answered the purpose for which it was made admirably, until the late unpleasantness between the North and South. So long as this old document was intact, the minority in the South could defy the majority. For seventy years it stood like an impregnable wall around the Southern people and so bitter were the North against it that they pronounced it "a covenant with death, and a league with hell." It was to destroy this old document that the war was inaugurated, and when the South was vanquished and laid down her arms the death knell of the Constitution was sounded. From that hour a majority-rule was instituted. But it is hard for the old Southern men to realize the change and adapt themselves to the situation. In all their speeches in the House and in the Senate, we see them clinging to the old document. While the Southern members still speak of the old Constitution with all the veneration that a Hebrew would speak of the law of Moses, the Northern men sit back in their seats and laugh at them. On the 20th of January, M. I. TOWNSEND, Republican, of New York, made a speech in the House on the subject of the Constitution, which caused much laughter among the Republicans, and great mortification and chagrin among the sober old Democrats. Inasmuch as it has been turned into a cause of ridicule, we would advise our old Democratic friends to cease their blind veneration of the dead old document, and recognize the fact that we are now living under a majority rule—mob law—which is Democracy gone to seed. The best thing they can now do is to recognize this fact and strive to gain the majority. All their speeches on this subject is so much time wasted, a vain effort at resurrecting the dead. It is not pleasant to be laughed at under any circumstances, and it is the keenest source of mortification to be ridiculed for acting the simpleton—for making an effort at the impossible. Whether we shall ever have a constitution again in this government, with any vitality, is one of the problems belonging to philosophers. It is certain that a constitution which does not protect the rights of the minority against the aggressions of the majority is not worth the paper on which it is written. This was the weak point in the old Grecian republic. The will of the majority was the law of the land. Under this law Socrates was put to death. The conspirators raised a clamor against him, and the mob of Athens held an election and voted to put him to death. This is what we mean by Democracy going to seed. History repeats itself, and we may expect to see the day when all cases shall be determined by the majority without reference to courts. Even now a man's property can be voted away without his consent, in the shape of subsidies. This is only the beginning—the initiatory step. In an empire the minority are protected from the will of the mob by the strong arm of the Emperor, but in a Democratic country, without a constitution, the minority have no protection. We hope the American people may yet see their error in time to save themselves.

Revolution in Cuba.

It appears by late dispatches from Great Britain that Spain is willing to make a great change in respect to the relations of Cuba with the mother government at Madrid, provided slavery can be maintained in the colony. This appears to be the only obstacle in the way of an amicable adjustment of all the difficulties between America and Spain. America will never agree to any settlement recognizing slavery as a fixed institution in a colony at our very door. There is greater antipathy to slavery in the heart of the American people at the present time than exists among any other people on the globe. Not that we are better or more humane than others, but because of the recent strife we have passed through in consequence of slavery. East and West, North and South, the American people all despise slavery. The Southern people hate it because they have suffered for it, and the Northern people hate it upon the principle that we hate those whom we have injured most. Thus as a nation we are a unit against slavery, and Spain will never make any satisfactory settlement with us until she consents to abolish that institution. It is doomed, and, right or wrong, it must go. But notwithstanding we are thoroughly abolitionists in all our feelings now, in view of the sufferings and disturbed state of society in the Southern States, caused by the summary manner in which the slaves were liberated, we would much prefer to have gradual emancipation of the slaves in Cuba, as it would be much better both for the slaves and their owners, as well as for the country and the world at large. It was considered by some a necessity with the Government of the United States to abolish slavery in a very summary manner. Neither the slaves nor their owners were prepared for the change as they should have been. Nevertheless they would have gone on and kept the country in a comparatively prosperous condition if they had been left alone. The greatest mistake a government ever made was made by this Government after the slaves were liberated, in placing the Government of the country in the hands of the freedmen, totally unprepared even for self-government. Having never had a thought in regard to making the least provisions for their own comfort or that of others; having no education, they had never been taught the art of even thinking upon any subject, and in this condition they were forced, not only to take upon themselves the great responsibility of providing for themselves, but the responsibility of the government of the States was thrown upon them. Who can wonder at the state of affairs in the South? with our own sad experience before us, we most earnestly hope that Spain may negotiate terms by which gradual emancipation may take place.

America Hunting an Honest Man.

There is an editorial in the December number of Harper's Monthly, which deserves the serious consideration of every true American citizen. The central idea of said editorial is that after one hundred years of national existence, the chief position obtained by the American people is only that where the uppermost consideration is, to find an honest man for office. It is a bad commentary upon American politics and public virtue. We, as a nation, boast of our progress made in material civilization; and in our boasting have lost sight of the higher purposes of national existence. We failed to cultivate the sound and only true principles of good sound government so earnestly inculcated by the Fathers of the Republic—public virtue and honesty. Now after one hundred years, when we survey the distracted corrupt state of politics and politicians, all we can say is to repeat the memorable utterance of Cicero: "O ye immortal gods, where in the world are we?" The people, as a mass, are honest. It is their great indifference to these things that perpetuates the evil. Seldom do they resolve to act upon the principal that virtue, honesty and uprightness, are the qualities that are required in a candidate for office and public trust, nor fluency of language nor knowledge of arts and sciences. Both the making and the administration of law ought neither to be warped by favor nor broken through by the power of the noble, nor bought by money. When this is done we may be sure that both the press and the people are at fault. The ultimate remedy for any public evil is lodged in the hands of the people. The divine right to rule belongs not to any man. All such rights are delegated by the people. The autocrat of Russia is simply an autocrat because the people permit such authority. If the masses were to rise up and say, "Thus far and no farther," he dare not resist or disobey. The press, the pulpit and public schools are the educators of the people. It is their duty to train the masses in the principles which underlie good government; to thoroughly imbue the public mind and heart with those sentiments of virtue, honesty and uprightness which constitute the elements of the true Statesman and Statesmanship. Hence amid all the work done during this Centennial year, no greater can be done than for these three agencies to educate the people as well as themselves in those grand requisites of national prosperity and greatness. The sad picture we present to the world as drawn by Harper, but too plainly indicates that one, two or all of these agencies have failed to inculcate those high moral virtues that elevate a nation.

East Indian Angels.

At Baroda, a bridge over which the Prince of Wales was to pass, was adorned in honor of the occasion. Among the ornaments were angels, which the Indian decorators produced by transforming the ugly youngsters of that land. Ten boys were fixed at different points of the bridge, and "eyes right" once obtained, the angel maker proceeded. With a great brush—such as is used by bill stickers—the

On Saturday last Peter Rice was discharged from the State Prison, having served his term for grand larceny. He celebrated his return to the city by getting drunk and afterwards settling down to business. He was caught in the act of disposing of two horse blankets which he had stolen. He is in prison again awaiting trial.

A messenger in the employ of H. W. Plummer & Co., stock brokers, named John Seely, abstracted $1,600 from his employers. Seely used to be a telegraph operator in Utah. About the middle of last week he took $100. The error was found in the books, but the cash was not discovered. On the Friday following the juvenile population made the deposits at the bank and took $1,500, not including the $100, thereby preventing the immediate discovery of his crime. He was not seen thereafter, and the theft was not found until Monday. Search was made for him by the detectives, and it was found that he left for Panama on the last steamer under the name of John Clair.

Ex-Rev. T. M. Dawson filed another affidavit to-day against the Evening Post, asking the 19th District Court to hold the publisher for contempt in printing the affidavit of one of the defendants on Saturday last. Judge Wheeler issued an order to Goodman, the publisher of the Post, to show cause why he should not be punished for such contempt, returnable on Friday next.

The jury in the Antioch distillery case disagreed and were discharged this morning. It is reported that they stood seven for the defendant and five for the government.

Ah Gin's brother states that he lost his opium pipe on Monday, and when he ascertained that his most valued household god had gone, he went to his brother's apartments last evening and assaulted Ah Chin, an occupant, with the pipe, inflicting several frightful lacerations. He assigned as his reason for the assault upon an unoffending party that Chin had stolen his pipe, and that he should not be punished for such contempt, returnable on Friday next.

There are rumors on the street that Paraf, of oleomargarine or ball butter fame, lately connected with some metallurgical works conducted on some plan of his own, has gone away, leaving his friends in a state of confusion and a deficit in the capital of the reduction works.

The bunks sharps who were liberated from the county jail last week have another game in full blast on Kearny street, unmolested by the police.

A Mr. Duncan and lady, while returning from the Cliff House Tuesday night, were stopped by three masked men, who relieved Duncan of his watch and chain and some pocket money. $150 in one pocket was overlooked. The highwaymen jumped in the carriage and drove into town, leaving Duncan and lady to walk back to the Cliff House.

The Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias holds its eighth annual session in this city next week, beginning on Tuesday evening.

Last night a man was garroted on Bush street, between Montgomery and Sansome, and his money and watch taken. Another man was knocked senseless on Post, near K-rany, and robbed. These are two of the most travelled localities in the city, and shows how bold and active the robbers are becoming.

STERN NEWS.

Trial of Rubenstein.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2d.—The taking of testimony for the prosecution in the trial of Rubenstein continued in Brooklyn to-day. The most damaging evidence was that of Professor Easton, who had examined the stains on the prisoner's coat. The murdered girl's shawl stains were human blood, and the mud on the prisoner's boots was the same as that in the cornfield, and the testimony of Aug. Simond's girl, who sold Rubenstein the pistol with which he committed the deed, was also very positive against him. It was reported late this evening he had attempted suicide in the court room by taking poison, but the rumor has not been verified.

Storms in the East.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2d.—Annually severe gales have prevailed all day, with a sudden fall of the mercury to 18 degrees above zero. Several houses in the upper part of the city were destroyed—buildings demolished, signs blown down, and other damage done. No serious casualties are reported. The sudden change in the temperature is severely felt. The telegraph wires are prostrated in all directions, and the telegraph managers report loss in various places blowing down as fast as they can be put up. Reports from all parts of the Middle and Western States say the gale is furious, and the weather at all points in the West is reported as severe, and the gale as terrific, accompanied by a snow storm in many places. Sudden change and high winds are reported from Rutledge, Montreal, and other points in the East and Canada. Dispatches from the South also report a heavy gale and prostration of telegraph wires. The storm extended all the way to the Gulf of Mexico, and was destructive. In Brooklyn the wind blew a hurricane, and in addition to other damages a row of five nearly completed buildings were blown down into long heaps of rain. Loss about $10,000.

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 2d.—A wind storm commenced blowing early this morning and lasted till about 10 o'clock of the day, was the severest in this portion of the State for years. Considerable damage was done to property in this city and vicinity, roofs blowing off and chimneys, telegraph poles and fences were prostrated. No lives lost.

PATTERSON, N. J., February 2d.—It has blown a continual gale all day, and done great damage throughout the city. Two new houses, nearly completed, were blown down, and the street Baptist church, chimneys, telegraph poles and fences were blown down and a number of roofs blown off. The wind is subsiding this evening.

HARTFORD, Conn., February 2d.—A furious gale began here this afternoon. The wind carried three hundred feet of the roof off of Trinity college. Buildings were upset, several carriages blown over, immense quantities of ice and shutters blown down, and other damage in various parts of the city.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Feb. 2d.—A very heavy wind prevailed to-day, doing great damage. A dwelling house and barn were blown down at Branford.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, February 2d.—Mr. O'Brien, of Maryland, offered a resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to inquire into the expediency of requesting the President to negotiate a special treaty with France.

Mr. Woodard advocated the right of the people to choose whom they pleased as President, and to elect him as often as they pleased.

The previous question was asked, after which Mr. Knott, of Kentucky, closed the debate, arguing that there should be such a limitation as the one at present proposed in the Constitution it was argued that experience made the incumbent a traitor, but he was not elected, and had been an instance where last year of a President had been better than the preceding year, and if a President was not competent when he entered upon his duties the country had better establish a school for training Presidential aspirants. The necessity of this limitation was urged, and the bill relating to the Presidential term.

Mr. Phillips, of Kansas, advocated the bill, after which Mr. Regan, of Texas, asked leave to offer an amendment limiting the term of President to six years after 1881, but retaining the feature of the ineligibility.

Pending further discussion Mr. New of Indiana moved to recommit the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

The vote was taken and resulted, yeas, 125, nays, 127. The Speaker voted in the negative, defeating the reference.

Fagan's amendment was then rejected by yeas, 70, nays, 184.

A vote was then had on the amendment of Mr. Fagan, which was rejected by yeas, 109, nays, 134.

Question recurred on the bill as originally reported and which provides for its taking effect at once, and limiting the Presidential term to four years. A two-thirds vote was required and the bill was defeated. Yeas, 144; nays, 106.

Randall, who changed his vote to the yeas, that purpose entered a motion to reconsider the vote, whereby the bill was defeated. The bill was partisan with the exceptions of Messrs. Crane, Dummell, Frost and Phillips. The Republicans voted in the affirmative. Messrs. Anderson, Cabell, Chittenden and Hamilton, of New Jersey, Hardenburg, Raymond, Crocker, Kerr, New, Potter, Randall, Swan, Thomas, Walsh, Wicks and Wood, of New York. The Democrats voted negative.

House adjourned at 5 P. M.

Los Angeles as Others See it.

From a private letter written by a lady visiting this city last fall to a friend in Darlington, England, and published in the Northern Echo, we give a few extracts as follows: "How can I possibly describe the climate? I enjoy it more than any one but myself can understand. I have found at last what I have longed for for years. It is a real enjoyment to breathe the pure invigorating air. Invalids come here and are soon in robust health. The mornings are delightful. We rise early here, as all the people seem to do, and rest a little in the noonday heat. The ranch carts (or farm carts) come in about 6 or 7 o'clock with the loads of vegetables beautiful to see. The Chinese seem to grow most of the vegetables, and do most of the laundry work, and charge from 2s. to 6s. per dozen, according to size, but they don't know how to wash flannels, they invariably spoil them. I never tasted such fine nuts anywhere, the flavor is so good. There are acres of apples, grapes, pears, lemons, oranges, etc., but all covered so thickly with fine dust you could scarcely see the fruit was there. They sell grapes by the cut, at a half penny per pound. The walnuts bring ten cents per pound here, and the apples sell pretty dear—4s. 5 and 6s. per bushel. There is no society worth speaking of, the people seem given up to making money. There is less refinement here by far than there is in New Zealand. The population is very mixed, mostly Spaniards, Chinese, Americans, and many Germans and French. It doesn't seem so homely as New Zealand did, and the climate is much the same as the Summer is there. They tell me if there was more rain they could not produce the fruit they do, and still they all have to irrigate if they are to grow anything. The vegetables grow beautifully if they are attended to; you can have green peas ten months out of the year, and lettuce always. They don't cook half as well here as they do in New York. Every day there is an unlimited supply of apples and grapes for desert. Nothing would induce me to come back to your horrid climate. Fashions don't stand for much here; people wear anything to suit either purse or fancy. The chamber-maids don't hurt themselves with work and sit down in the same dining room that we do, and are served exactly the same. What would English people think of that?"
